Image © THE BRITISH LIBRARY BOARD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

ed replied that it was not his train tached to. That they ought to ingham express, which had waited but had gone on without him, as
e. He was told to wait, and come The train passed the Harrow clock. He was in the second-class t to the break van where the deddenly felt a great shock, and his escape out of the carriage by he luggage van off the line some ashed to pieces. He heard another London, and, for personal safety, w a train coming, and he shouted, d, and this caused the speed of the lackened. It came in contact with of the other train, but not forcibly. lapsed before assistance was oburs before a medical man was on f the passengers been seriously ined for want of assistance. e met here to inquire into the cir-e melancholy accident. You are tances which occurred after. The to the description and quality of that the tyres were invariably used, by heavy force, as well as SALLE ROBIN.—Mdlle. Prudence Bernard, who, some year and a half ago, exhibited at the Hungerford Bazaar the wonders of clairvoyance and mesmerism, gave a private "seeance" last night at the "Salle Robin," in Tichborne-street, Haymarket, preparatory to the opening of her public performances on Monday next. The lady is now under the mesmeric guardianship of Professor Roux, with whom it is stated she has made a successful tour in France and Germany. The experiments are conducted in this wise. After Mdlle. Prudence Bernard has been placed in a magnetic sleep, the wishes of any of the audience are communicated secretly to M. Roux, who, by a series of passes, compels her to fetch and carry to a wonderful extent; and next, to distinguish in a glass of water the taste of any liquid which may be desired by any of the spectators. The first experiment in this department though finally successful was rendered somewhat difficult to the mesmeric patient, in consequence of the interrogator being an Irish gentleman whose mind naturally reverted to "whiskey," a liquor with which the lady was evidently not familiar. Mdlle. Bernard then played cards with her eyes tightly bound, still being in a state of coma, and concluded by a series of dramatic posturings, the whole of which were privately suggested by different members of the audience. The experiments of the evening were all quite successful, and one or two sceptical gentlemen who were allowed every latitude in testing the bona fides of the exhi-